BROOKLYN'S NEW PITCHER.

Eugene McCann Joins the Champions' Staff.

The champion Brooklyn team has added another pitcher to its corps of twirlers.

The new man is Eugene McCann, who is considered to be a promising man.

When President Ebbets made the announcement this morning he did not know what club McCann was secured from. He had merely been informed by Manager Hanlon that McCann had signed.

A DAY IN THE LIFE OF BRAVE KINLEY MACK, THE CHAMPION OF AMERICAN THOROUGHBREDS.

RUBBED DOWN AFTER HIS GALLOP.

Kinley Mack! A name with which to conjure up glorious memories of the turf, a name which will long linger in the minds of turfmen as a synonym for all that is good and honest and true in the thoroughbred. No praise is too extravagant for a horse of the type of the son of Lexington. A cripple, his courage has carried him to victory when his legs were burning as if the bones were white hot iron rods searing the flesh. It was his stout heart, his indomitable gameness that won for him last season the Brooklyn and Suburban Handicaps, two prizes greatly coveted by horsemen. He was the best handicapper of last season and his glorious victories have made him favorite in the big spring events of the coming season.

Was Curiously Named. Kinley Mack! A curious name and curiously chosen. He was owned up to a short time ago by Easton & Larabee, sterling turfmen of national reputation. Mr. Larabee strongly fancied Kinley Mack as a yearling. He thought, and later years proved the wisdom of his judgment, that Kinley Mack would prove a colt out of the ordinary. Mr. Larabee lived out in Montana, a hill-bound free silver district, where Democrats are as plentiful as fleas in a dog's tail. But Mr. Larabee was a Republican, a staunch admirer of President McKinley and his Administration. He thought that his colt was worthy of carrying the name of the Chief Executive. So he sent on the colt's pedigree to the Jockey Club for registration and claimed the name of McKinley for him.

Another McKinley. It so happened that the name McKinley had been claimed for another horse, and the Jockey Club notified Mr. Larabee that he would have to select another name. His Democratic friends gave him the laugh when they heard that the Jockey Club had turned Larabee down. He was not daunted, however, and he determined that the colt should have the name even if he had to twist it around a bit. So he sent to the Jockey Club once more, this time naming the son of Lexington Kinley Mack. The name was accepted and it has been carried into turf history by a great horse. Kinley Mack, though he will race in the name and color of J. B. Haggin this season, is still being trained by that stable, "Colonel" Thompson looking after him while Skinner carefully looks after the bandage of cotton-battling that he wears around his tender foreleg. The colt wears these bandages at all times except when on the track. They keep his leg warm, tend to keep up a circulation of blood and prevent colds.

Stables Busy at Dawn. The real busy of racing cannot be appreciated until one pays an early morning visit to the track. At the first peep of dawn the stables are alive with noise. Each boy has his own line of duty. The day doors are thrown open and the horses stretch their heads eagerly into the fresh, sweet morning air. The boys line up at the feed room, each with a pail in hand. The quantity of oats doled out varies with the horse, some being on light feed and others are given their full ration. The point of the feeding oats brings forth curious antics from the horses, uttering sounds of almost human intelligence.

In Fond of His Rubber. This morning Kinley Mack stretched his neck out to Charles Skinner, his great-eyed mending intently to the rubber. As plainly as if in human language he was saying, "Please hurry! I'm as hungry as a bear."

Skinner and Kinley Mack got on famously, and the hero of last year's Suburban and Brooklyn gave the rubber a playful poke with his nose as Skinner buckled the stall bar with the colt's breakfast.

A Luxurious Horse. Kinley Mack was not due out until the third of this morning, so he had plenty of time at his breakfast. He is a luxurious rascal, too, for when he finished eating he gently poked at the rubber spot in the stall and prepared to take a snooze. He was not disturbed by the string of two-legged creatures plodding around the stable, each led by a stable boy, who was either singing or whistling merrily.

Every stable boy whistles or sings. Not, perhaps, because it is a vent to his sublimated spirits, but because whistling and singing soothe a horse and distract his attention from things that might perhaps worry or annoy him.

Kinley Mack's turn for work finally came and he was rustled out of his stall. "Colonel" Thompson took hold of the halter and led him carefully to the paddock, then addressed the horse, telling him to be ready for the start at 12 o'clock.

After the work the horses were again lined up and the time Mr. Skinner went over all of them carefully. The horses were walked about, checked for lameness, and the boys, giving them minute instructions as to what they should do. At this stage of the game the rubber is put on the horse's foreleg, and the work of the day is permitted to begin.

YALE-HARVARD CHALLENGE RECEIVED.

CAMBRIDGE, England, March 25.—The Cambridge University Athletic Club has received the challenge of Harvard and Yale for a regular set of track games between Oxford and Cambridge, and Harvard and Yale, to be held in New York during the early part of next July.

The Rev. Joseph H. Gray, treasurer of the Cambridge University Athletic Club, estimates that there will be every disposition to arrange a meeting, but it is difficult for the Cambridge men to go in July. The club will probably suggest another date, preferably September.
